SUBJECT: National Reporting System Web Sites

There are two web sites for the National Reporting System which are important for Basic Skills/literacy staff. The site, www.nrsweb.org, gives information about reporting requirements, including the latest NRS Guidelines book. NRS Online, www.nrsonline.org, provides training materials and has a course staff may take and get certification for the National Reporting System. Below are descriptions of the web sites:

“NRS Web is the primary Web site for the National Reporting System (NRS) for Adult Education. This site includes information about the NRS, recent workshop materials, additional resources, and publications in the field of adult education. In addition, the NRS Web offers a question and answer section, and contact information for project staff, technical working group members, and U.S. Department of Education staff.”

“NRS Online is the training site for the National Reporting System for adult education (NRS). This site contains training courses designed for adult education program administrators that explain NRS requirements and courses designed to improve the quality of NRS data collection. You can also use this site as a reference source for the NRS.” (www.nrsonline.org)
